The Heartiest Letter.

When Duke told his dastard's story, people said that no man would have told it; and when his black-hearted letters were made public, the indignation was more intense. The verdict of decent humanity was that hanging was too good for a man who had entered a home to violate its sanctity. The representations which he had made to the father concerning the young girl, coupled with an infamous proposition, all this was looked upon as aggravating the villainy. The killing of the father was hardly more a murder than the driving the steel-pointed letters into his heart.

People thought of the disgrace to the family of the exposure, and agreed that it was all as bad as could be. To how many came the thought—Perhaps the second lie? He had made a shameful confession, but no sense of shame showed in those lines in which, with the pen of a ready writer, he amplified his confessed iniquities with redundant phrases. It seemed that he could not confess to enough—eyes that looked to lust, serpent advances, retaining in his devil's grasp the scarred hand and reveling in his easy conquest, eaves-dropping, gathering up the little tale of the town, cowardly retreat from the ruin he had wrought. Even though he had murdered the father, it does not seem to have occurred to the townsfolk, or, for that matter, to anybody else, that there was an unhappy orphaned girl to whom something was due—at least a suspension of judgment; that perhaps the villain had confessed too much.

Every man whom Duke named to show that he was no worse than other people has made affidavit that with respect to himself the assassin lied; that with respect to the young woman, it was a lie that she had been known as a wanton, and for himself he believed her to be pure and good. The verdict of the jury, arising from public sentiment to the highest pitch of indignation, touched, also, the finest sensibilities, awoke all that was kindly human in every breast; the representations of the traducer and assassin were publicly advanced with open arms to the poor girl on whom has fallen an avalanche of horror.

What if there had been no murder—no clearing by a packed and perjured jury? Suppose Duke had merely talked his shame about the town. Correct women would have avoided him, and men careful of reputation would have been afraid to give him countenance. "Give a dog a bad name" is a saying which means more than applied to a woman—she is convicted without a hearing; previous good character available little, in making up the general verdict, nothing; society brands the convict with the Scarlet Letter—she can not live it down, she can not wear it off. Women, jealous of the good name of their sex, resentful of any blot upon their common womanhood, are quickest to believe and punish. The whispered dagger stabs many a pure woman in the dark, and it may be that she knows not why, only that she is avoided. We hear, believe, and condemn the one we think to be wronged, and have no penalty for the aggressive wrong-doer. If Duke had stopped short of murder it is not probable that he would have lost anything of his social standing. Certainly men never expect to lose, and society encourages them—gentle women even condole them, with the apology that "maybe he is a little wild, but he is always a gentleman in the company of ladies." The Scarlet Letter is not for a man, but a woman may have it stamped upon her without ceremony and often without knowing it is there. It isn't fair, and it isn't Christian.

BREAKFAST BUDGET.

A New Yorker has been fined $300 for giving tobacco to a giraffe in Central Park. Two hundred and four New York youths under twenty years of age have married within a year.

One-tenth of the foreign immigration to this country in the year 1881 settled in Pennsylvania.

The Italian government has begun to substitute bronze for the steel guns now used for field artillery.

At Turin, in 1884, there will be opened a general Italian exhibition, to embrace physics and general chemistry, with their applications, and mathematics.

In Churchville, Conn., is a hill of moving sand four miles long, a mile wide and from 100 to 400 feet high. Within a few years the hill has traveled a mile.

A Baltimore manager lately succeeded in securing a large attendance at his theatre by announcing that jars of preserved fruit would be distributed among the audience.

The foreign settlement at Shanghai is lighted by the Brush electric light. The Chinese Governor has issued an order for the removal of the lights, thinking them unsafe.

A Russian princess at a recent ball given in Nice, wore a dress made entirely of peacock's feathers. Heads of the birds with eyes made of garnets, were used in the looping.

During the past ten years the valuation of real estate in New York City has risen from $77,125,115 to $805,200,810, while that of personal estate has fallen off fully one-third.

A society has been formed in England under the presidency of the Archbishop of Canterbury, which has for its object "the Christianizing, simplifying and cheapening funeral and mourning ceremonies."

Near La Paz, Mexico, has been discovered the largest pearl the world has ever known. It is light in color, oval in form, one inch in length and three-quarters of an inch in its smallest diameter. Its value is $50,000.

A lady in Brunswick, Maine, lately called in a physician to prescribe for her sick cat. In a short time the cat died, and a coffin was purchased costing $12.50. Finally a cable dispatch was sent to the lady's absent husband, announcing pussy's decease.

CAMERON.

A Change for the Better and the Cause which Produced It.

CAMERON, W. VA., March 17.

To the Editor of the Intelligencer.

Sir:—The stranger who visits Cameron at long intervals cannot but be struck with the improvement of the order and morals of the town. True, there is still a large class of citizens here who used to make the town vocal with drunken revelry when whisky was king; but they are in a decided minority.

It is not putting it too strongly to say that it is not an ordinary sight to see that the streets filled with drunken, fighting rowdies, while bowie knives and revolvers were flourished on all hands. In those days when there was trouble between two or more of the inhabitants of the surrounding country, it was customary to appoint a day when they would meet in Cameron and fight it out. All this has changed, and Cameron has become a quiet, orderly village. One such brawl as used to be such a common occurrence as to pass unnoticed, would now startle and excite the whole place.

This happy change is owing largely to two causes: First, the town has been incorporated, and has a very efficient municipal government, at the head of which is Mayor McDonald, a courageous, honest and capable official; a Council with common sense enough to adopt ordinances which conduce to the peace and progress of the community; and the special pride of the people, the Town Sergeant, Captain Markey, who is modest and quiet, but unflinching in the performance of his duty and a terror to evil doers.

But there is another cause, and one which I wish especially to mention. It is the reform in the matter of the sale of intoxicants. The battle against King Alcohol was long and tedious, but he was finally overcome and driven from his former stronghold. No license is now granted here for the sale of liquor, and the sale of the same is now a thing of the past. The battle against King Alcohol was long and tedious, but he was finally overcome and driven from his former stronghold. No license is now granted here for the sale of liquor, and the sale of the same is now a thing of the past.

If it be true that under Democratic rule the State has been plunged into debt to the amount of a quarter of a million of dollars, isn't it the height of folly to continue that party any longer in power?

There is food for reflection here for the tax-payers of West Virginia to consider over.
